A client’s ability to understand and complete matching and identification tasks is often impaired as a result of aphasia. The client may have lost the ability to determine how shapes, numbers, letters, or words are alike or different. A client may no longer understand what the concept of matching means.

For clients with anomia, the matching and identification tasks stimulate expressive language, making the use of these activities especially helpful for them.

The matching and identification tasks begin simply, with single, more concrete items (that are not loaded with meaning) and progress to more complex tasks. The tasks are also designed to improve the client’s ability to process auditory, graphic, and visual material.

Overall, the tasks in this section are receptive but can be used to build other skills, like expressive language, visual recognition, and fine motor skills.

Therapy Suggestions

Use the activities as they are to improve the ability to understand the task.

- Say or describe the shapes or pictures as the client completes the activity with a motor response like pointing. This process often stimulates the client to repeat the name of the object spontaneously.

- Use these activities to help the client regain the understanding that symbols stand for words, words stand for objects, and letters stand for sounds — necessary skills for reading.

- Repeat the activities matching a picture to words and sentences to improve the client’s word finding skills.

- Help improve visual identification and memory skills by covering pictures and asking the client to recall visual information he saw on the page.
