

About the Authors

Suzanne Evans Morris, Ph.D., CCC-SLP, a speech-language pathologist in private practice near Charlottesville, Virginia, is recognized for her work in identifying and treating pre-speech and feeding disorders in young children. She is the director of New Visions, an organization that sponsors workshops for teaching feeding-related skills and provides family-oriented clinical services. She has written extensively about assessment and remediation techniques for children who have oral feeding problems. Dr. Morris holds the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association's Certificate of Clinical Competence in Speech. She has completed basic and advanced coursework in pediatrics through the Neuro-Developmental Treatment Association. She and Marsha Dunn Klein co-authored the first edition of Pre-Feeding Skills: A Comprehensive Resource for Feeding Development, a best seller in the area for feeding children with special needs, as well as Mealtime Participation Guide.

Marsha Dunn Klein, M.Ed., OTR/L, is a registered occupational therapist and a partner in Pueblo Pediatric Therapy, a cross-disciplinary pediatric therapy practice in Tucson, Arizona. She has completed basic and advanced pediatric coursework through the Neuro-Developmental Treatment Association. Her master's degree in special education has contributed to her interest in and skill with a special needs population. Ms. Klein's practice includes direct pediatric treatment, continuing education workshops, consultation and materials development. Previous publications include the first edition of Pre-Feeding Skills and Mealtime Participation Guide, which she co-authored with Suzanne Morris, and Feeding and Nutrition for the Child with Special Needs with Tracy Delaney, Ph.D.
