
About the Authors

Jill Kirkpatrick is a speech-language pathologist in Vancouver, Washington. Before going into private practice in 1982, she had been affiliated with a number of public-school, university, and government childhood speech programs. She has given presentations throughout the Northwest on childhood speech issues and taught a child-development class at Clark College in Vancouver.

Ms. Kirkpatrick received a B.S. (with highest distinction) in speech pathology and audiology from Purdue University in West Lafayette, Indiana, and an M.S. in speech pathology from the same institution. She holds the Certificate of Clinical Competence in Speech-Language Pathology from the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association.

Before going into private practice in Vancouver, Washington, in 1985, Pamela Stohr worked as a speech-language pathologist and diagnostician at the Washington State School for the Deaf and at the Speech and Hearing Institute of the University of Texas Health Science Center in Houston.

Ms. Stohr received a B.S. in speech pathology from the University of Oregon and an M.S. in speech pathology and audiology from the University of Washington. She holds the Certificate of Clinical Competence in Speech-Language Pathology from the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association.

As a speech-language pathologist in private practice, Deborah Kimbrough provides speech and language assessment and treatment for preschool and school-age children in the Vancouver, Washington, area. Before going into private practice in 1984, she was a communication disorders specialist for several school districts in the state of Washington.

Ms. Kimbrough received B.A. and M.A. degrees in speech pathology from Washington State University. She holds the Certificate of Clinical Competence in Speech-Language Pathology from the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association.

© Copyrighted Material by PRO-ED, INC.